"Baby doll, I'm not letting you go this time."

Its finally happened for Savannah. She is about to find out how much she has angered other people due to her addiction to Vincent. What she didn't realize is how much danger she is about to be in because of it. Its ongoing, the danger. Many people want to see her get out of the way and the price tag on her head keeps rising.

But Vincent... he doesn't want to let her go again. He's determined to be the man she needs and that's that. Their chemistry is still off the charts.

Does good chemistry weigh out possible death?

Vincent and Savannah are not free from the underworld politics nor will they ever be. What neither of them realized is how much those politics control them.

Is their love going to be enough to risk relocating? Once you're in, there is no coming out unless its in a body bag. But does Vincent love Savannah enough to turn his back on omerta?

Excerpt:

I ignored the answer and rubbed my hands up and down Vincent's chest while leaning into his ear. "How much longer do you think you will be?" I asked as I put my hands in his shirt to loosen it up. "I think I am ready to go to bed. Well, maybe not bed..."

His face turned so red it looked like it was going to catch on fire. "What ever are you implying?" He asked me as I ran my hand down to his belt buckle and grabbed it.

"You are a smart man."

"Damn, you two!" Johnny exclaimed while placing his hand over his forehead. "You sure know how to kill a buzz."

"Then don't look at us," Vincent replied as I dropped my hand lower and placed my other hand on the back of his head to tip it up so he could kiss me. "Maybe we should make this a private party. You guys can leave," he ordered while grabbing my ass and pushed me further up his lap.

This is an adult subject novel and is part of a three book series. Please do not buy this book if sexual scenes and violence bother you.
